MISCELLANEOUS READING. A Scrap for Lovers of Molasses.

We copy the following from a long and in-teresting article, entitled "Rambles in Surinam: "We went to the boiling house, and saw the molasses dipped out of the eistern and put into barrels. The molasses that runs

Messrs. Gregory & Maury, of Wilmington, Dela-ware, we have deemed it expedient to change the from the sugar barrels is conducted by a gutter into the cistern, which is under ground, and swarms with roaches and rats, many of which are found dead in the molasses, by which they are preserved from putrefaction. I could not help thinking that this country would be an elysium for Chinamen, for they might feast here on their dish (rats) abundantly, and molasses cured rats into the bargain. I do not know if the molasses which is imported into this country is used for anything else besides distilling rum. It is certainly not fit for table use, for besides the above mentioned abominations, it is handled by the negroes in such a filthy manner, that the description of it will disgust everybody

> "The molasses is dipped out of the eistern with large copper spoons, to which are attached long handles, but when the majority is removed, these spoons cannot be employed any more, on account of the quantity of sugar which has settled at or near the bottom, imparting a great toughness to the molasses .-Some negroes have to sit down into it, dipping out with large gourds, and it reaches often over their knees. Cleanliness is to be observed, and their feet and legs are generally covered with jiggers and other sores. If our delicate ladies and gentlemen had an idea of the manner in which our imported niceties were handled, they would surely abstain from 100 the use of them. I once say a dog fall into a copper in which cane juice was boiling intensely; he was nearly done when the negroes succeeded in getting him out. It happens, sometimes, that a negro who sits on the mason work into which the coppers are imbedded, slips into the foaming syrup while dozing, and 400 is boiled to death instantly. In neither case100,000 is the syrup thrown away, for it will granulate all the same and nobody is the wiser for
